

Air resistance and streamlining Checklist

Air resistance is caused by air particles banging into the object.

The faster the object is moving, the more air particles hit it each second, therefore the higher the air resistance.

The bigger the surface area of the object the more air particles hit it each second, therefore the higher the air resistance.

You can reduce the air resistance by reducing the surface area in the direction of motion. This is called streamlining.